Medicaid helps our kids lead better lives—it's a smart investment in the nation’s future
Medicaid is a lifeline—it covers kids in every state, from every background. It provides affordable coverage to children in lower-income families and to kids with special health care needs. This federal-state partnership is the largest source of children’s health care coverage in the U.S.

Medicaid was designed with kids in mind
Medicaid provides children access to a comprehensive set of services through the Early and Periodic Screening, Diagnostic, and Treatment (EPSDT) benefit. This benefit ensures Medicaid covers the preventive services all kids need—things like immunizations, well-child checkups, and vision and dental services. What’s more, 1 in 3 children in Medicaid and the Children’s Health Insurance Program (CHIP) have behavioral health needs that can be treated earlier thanks to EPSDT. Medicaid also covers medically necessary care, so children can see a pediatric specialist or get the therapy they need.

Medicaid steps up for kids when they need it most
Most of our nation’s sickest children get coverage through Medicaid. For kids born with or who develop serious medical conditions, Medicaid provides coverage or fills coverage gaps for services not covered by private insurance. No one plans for kids to get sick, but thankfully Medicaid is a safety net for all our children.

Medicaid helps our kids reach their full potential
Medicaid helps kids grow into healthy and productive adults. Compared to uninsured children, those covered by Medicaid are more likely to have better health outcomes as adults, with higher school attendance and academic achievement. This leads to greater resiliency and success in careers and life.
Kids with Medicaid rely on children’s hospitals
Children’s hospitals are at the core of the health care delivery system for children, bringing together teams of specialists to provide care not available in any other setting. Since they serve children from many states, children’s hospitals must coordinate with multiple state Medicaid programs.

Medicaid is vital for kids’ health
Medicaid funding ensures children’s hospitals are able to be there for all children. On average, Medicaid reimburses children’s hospitals only 80% of the cost of care provided—even including all supplemental payments. Although there is room for improvement, continued investment in Medicaid is critical to children’s health and our nation’s future.

Parents across the country are thankful for Medicaid and children’s hospitals

Skylar from Arkansas
Private Insurance and Medicaid
Skylar needs 10 to 12 medications a day, and also requires respiration treatments, oxygen and feeding tubes, mobility equipment and more. Her mom says, “Even though my husband and I have full-time jobs, we still can’t afford the care and equipment that Skylar needs with our private insurance alone. Medicaid has allowed us to care for Skylar and get the supplies she needs.”

Lily from New Jersey
TRICARE and Medicaid
When she was 15 months old, Lily’s family was stationed in Japan as her father served aboard the USS Kitty Hawk. Suddenly, a routine ear infection spiraled out of control for Lily, resulting in presumed viral encephalitis and leading to seizures and brain damage. Her dad says,”Medicaid filled in the gaps that TRICARE missed—in so many ways it was a lifeline to our young family.”

Luis from Texas
Medicaid
Luis relies on Medicaid to help keep him healthy; it’s there for any special needs he might have as a cancer survivor, and also for the normal preventive checkups all kids need. His mom says, “I can’t imagine what his life would be like without Medicaid. I have to work and take care of Luis at the same time.”
